

Aizhan holds a master's degree in law from the Eurasian National University in Nur-Sultan, Kazakhstan. She has experience in the legal field, having worked for one year as a lawyer in the national company of Kazakhstan, and for three years as a lecturer at the Kazakh-American Free University, where she taught intellectual property law. Her research interests are centered around data ownership and the ownership of intangible objects.

Currently, Aizhan is a doctoral student at the Jagiellonian University in Krakow, Poland, where she is part of the EU's "LeADS" project. Her PhD dissertation focuses on the "Boundaries of information property — from concept to practice."