

Paola obtained her master's degree cum Laude from the Faculty of Law of the University of Pisa in 2021, discussing a thesis on the data processing operated by digital platforms in the pandemic-era remote teaching. After graduating, she joined the University of Cagliari as a PhD Student with a project on the digital economy and the contractual implications of data processing, therefore looking at the matter from the point of view of Private Law. Paola carried out an internship at the Criminal Court of Pisa, assisting a judge in drafting provisions in the process of digitalisation of justice and anonymisation of decisions.

She is the author of some papers in the field of Private Law, both contractual and family law.
